Odd Bits of Life.

When the circus was here, and the House found itself without a quorum, says the Washington correspondent of the St. Louis Globe Democrat, George D. Wise of Virginia told a good cloak-room story.
It was founded on fact. The scene was Hanover Court House, in Mr.
Wise's district, and the time was the last campaign. Mr. Wise and one of the Democratic nominees for elector at-large were announced to speak "on the issues of the day" at Hanover. "When we got to town," said Mr. Wise, "we discovered that a circus had spread its canvas for that very afternoon. The crowd was very large, but I had my doubts as to how the speaking would go in opposition to the circus. The meeting was set for 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and I knew that the circus people would begin to do business at about the same time. There didn't seem to be anything to do but to go ahead with our appointment.
We had the meeting called to order, and I told the elector that courtesy demanded that he, being a candidate on the State ticket, should make the first speech. He was inclined to waive that and have me begin, but I insisted. I knew that the circus crisis was coming, and I preferred to have him face it. So the elector was introduced and started off. All was ominously quiet around the circus tent. The crowd gathered to hear the speaking, and the elector began to warm up to the occasion.
He had spoken perhaps fifteen minutes, when suddenly the band struck up, the ticket-seller took his place, and the canvas door was thrown open. In two minutes there wasn't anybody around the platform, and I was the only person besides the elector upon the platform. The elector stopped and looked at me.
"It's no use talking against a circus," said I, and we got down and followed the crowd, which was gathering around the ticket-seller. I brought out some money from Richmond to extend hospitalities to my hearers when I had finished the speech I expected to make. I hunted up one of my best friends in the crowd, and handing him some money, I said:
"Here, you buy tickets to the circus with this, and give them to the right persons with my compliments." The next minute my friend was shouting at the top of his voice:
"Ladies and gentlemen, the Hon.
George D. Wise has authorized me to see that every one of you has a ticket to the show, with his compliments." With that the crowd shouted and crowded up. I saw my money go into the hands of the ticket-seller, and I saw the crowd pass into the circus at my expense.
Of course there was no stopping after that. It took the last quarter of my pocket before the job was finished, and there I stood, with my crowd inside and I alone on the outside. The circus manager came over to me, and with a grin complimented me on my electioneering tactics. He wanted to know if I wasn't going to see the show, and I told him the condition of my pocket.
"Pass right in, Mr. Wise," he said, and in I went. When the returns came from Hanover Court House after the election, I found I had swept the district clean." its foundations by the flood and dashed to pieces. The whole valley was a waste of rushing water; but as it turned out, the flood was not the only thing he had to fear, for just then he heard a scream in the distance. Little by little it came nearer, till he recognized it as the voice of a panther.

If the animal should scent him, his fate, as the historian expresses it, would be beyond the "help of insurance." Nearer and nearer it came, and soon he saw the limbs of a tree shaking at no great distance.

Another scream, this time close at hand! A shaking of the branches in another tree! Now he can see the panther, crouching in the very next tree, and ready to spring. His eyes flash, and as he growls he shows his fangs.

The panther puts up his back, shakes his tail, and makes his final jump. His aim is straight as an arrow, but as he strikes the branch Bacon shakes it at the right instant. The monster misses his hold, and tries in vain to recover it. His hind feet dangle in the air. Bacon shakes the limb again with all his might, and the panther, screaming horribly, drops into the torrent.

Bacon remained in his tree till late in the afternoon, when his neighbors were able to come to his relief.

The Soap Plant.

An original and important industry is carried on at Kansas City in the manufacture of soap from the wild and prickly plant of the prairies known as the Mexican soap weed, and, as described, its treatment affords a notable illustration of the modern utilization of waste products.
Since the Kansas prairie was an inland sea, says the Kansas City Times, this weed has thrust its roots deep into the soil of the unsheltered plains, and to gather these a sharp spade is driven down deeply by the side of the plant, the earth is broken, and the thick, brown root, secured, the top, with its long spines, being thrown aside. The root has been known to extend as far as twenty feet into the soil, but only from two to three feet of the upper portion, which is about two inches thick, is of practical service in the production of soap. In the manufacture of the latter, the roots are first washed, then cut up and boiled out in a big vat, where other ingredients are also placed, and, when this is dried out to such a degree that it will solidify, it is moulded into semi-transparent cakes which possess all the desirable qualities of toilet soap. A peculiar characteristic said to pertain to this weed is that, notwithstanding it grows in a region where alkali roots dot the ground, and where the soil is white with the chemical, none of it is found in the root.

Silk Culture in California.

The ladies of Petaluma have organized a company to purchase and handle all the silk cocoons produced in California. The idea is to develop the whole business of silk production and manufacture in California instead of sending our cocoons East for sale. Silk will no doubt eventually become one of the great industries of California.
Like France our conditions are favorable for carrying on all the processes from feeding the worm to the finished article.—San Francisco Bulletin.

On the Way to Paradise.

Let us hope that the people who habitually disregard their health will reach that desirable place, and avoid the locality which is less desirable as an eternal residence on account of the heat and surroundings generally. But while we tarry in this vale of tears, why should we voluntarily endure the tortures of dyspepsia when a systematic use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will rid us of the structure mainly which—unless physicians are very much at fault—tends to shorten the term of our existence. Heartburn, biliousness, constipation almost always accompany this complaint and are symptoms of it. These are all extinguished by the Bitters, which also conquers completely malaria, rheumatism, nervousness and debility. Since the appearance of "the gripe" it has shown a singular mastery over this formidable complaint that has carried off so many of our brightest and best.

Much snow fell during the winter, and the weather held cold until April. Then all at once there came a warm rain. The creek rose rapidly, but Bacon thought himself safe and went to bed as usual. Before midnight he was awakened rudely by the cracking of trees and the rushing of the torrent. He sprang out of bed, and found himself leg-deep in water. There was no time to lose in making a toilet. He ran to the nearest tree, clambered into it, and waited for daylight.

It was a dismal night, and his unseasonable cold bath added nothing to his comfort. The roar of the waters and the occasional crash of trees made it plain that the ice of the river had broken up. How soon would it carry away the tree in which he had taken refuge?

The dawn brought little encouragement. One of the first things he saw was his cabin, lifted from
